would not have helped imports, while they must equally well have known it would operate against the country's exports, and yet we are asked to believe that these men did not parceive that precisely the sime result would follow an indirect levy of 18 per cent. from limiting the number of coins in circulation and making money so much dearer. And now that this can be seen perhaps the English people may more clearly perceive the unalogy between their position and that of India. If raising the value of the standard money of India. kills the Indian export trade, what effect must a rise in the standard money of England have upon the English export trade. Suraly thinking men in England can answer this question themselves as well as it can be metallism is now gaining. To make a thing dear is to reduce the consumption of it; if ye make money dear it is with the object of increasing the supply and limiting the consumption, and if silver is dear silver prices fall. The same with gold, but make gold cheap and gold prices go up. The cheaper gold is made the better for gold prices and the only way to make gold cheap in by making silver dear. Since chap silver is an andoubted stimulant to trade in the East and as cheep gold was the equally undoubted stimulant to trade in the West, to make gold oheap by making silver dear would be to transfer the trade activity of the East to the West, and therefore the interests of the West demand the highest possible ratio for the sonversion of silver into gold, while the interests of the East require the lowest: If England Bir John Lubbock, on behalf of the opposition, desires to transfer its commercial life to the brought forward a motion to divide the Budget | East no surer way could be devised than a bimetallic ratio of 36 to 1, or 26 peace per conce Binking Fond.
